All people have a place that they consider their favorite place to be or a place to go to be alone. My bedroom is my favorite place to be. It is a place where I can relax, study, sleep, watch television, or where I can go to be myself. My room is the image of a typical teenage girl's room, a room of femininity. There are characteristics of my room that display this image, such as photographs and posters, the smells of a hair salon, and all the bright, beautiful colors.

The first thought that may pop into someone's mind when he or she sees my room is that it is as decorative as a birthday party. Upon entering my bedroom, what first catches anyone's eye is the sky blue paint on the top half of the walls and the sunshine yellow paint on the bottom half of the walls. In the middle of these pastel colors is a flower border, one that looks like a bed of tropical flowers in a garden. To make the room even more beautiful, there are sparkling crystal-blue tube lights that line the tall shelves. Covering the walls are art drawings of exotic flowers, gorgeous beaches, and beautiful animals.

Similar to most girls' bedrooms, the walls are lined with poster after poster and picture after picture. Most of the posters are of muscular male models. If it is not male models, famous television and movie actors, such as Josh Hartnett and Chad Michael Murray, surround the room. My collages are what make my room personal and feminine. In these collages, my best friends and I illustrate all the events we have enjoyed in the past. The elegant gowns we have on for our proms and school dances show the true feminine side of us. The collages show so much detail and action that it takes more than a moment to really see everything in each breath-taking picture.

The main detail that makes the room like most teenage girls' rooms is the distinct smell of beauty products. When nearing the room, the sweet aroma of Lucky You perfume fills the air. It smells like strawberry flavored candy with a touch of honey. Inside the room, there is a homemade vanity set where my hair products are located. Depending upon which item has most recently been used, the smell of steam from a ceramic straightening iron or the smell of a burning fire from a Conair hair dryer may fill the air. Also, the strong, apple fragrance of Loreal hair products catches anyone's attention and reminds ^{me} them that this is definitely a girl's room. Girl's rooms always have that distinct smell that boys would never have. The smell of candy, flowers, or sweet perfume is what would lead someone to believe a girl is present in that room.

At the end of the day when I close the door of my bedroom, the smell of my feminine perfume and hair products is still in the air. On the outside of the door, there are still pictures of what represents me as a teenage girl. These characteristics of my bedroom illustrate that it shows much femininity. Most objects and scents in my room display and describe what a typical teenage girl's room looks like.
